Local legends

The Historic Preservation Commission presented its second Local Legends Award to The Domino Players. The award, which honors those who have had a positive and lasting impact on the culture, development and history of Round Rock, was presented to the men at the service station at the intersection of Mays and Main where they have been playing for many years. Taking part in the presentation, sitting, L-R, were Clarence Telander, Nina Krienke-Turner of the commission, Harry Hildenbrand and Rudy Wallin. Other city and commission officials were, back, L-R, Hugh Bender, Ray Amaro, Robert Brinkman and Scott Brown.

DOMINO PLAYERS

The city's Historic Preservation Commission recently honored the Old Settlers Association and the Domino Players with its Local Legends award. According to the document given to the award winners, the honor is bestowed upon Round Rock citizens who "have had a positive, and lasting, impact on the culture, development and history of our community, and who exemplify the essence of Round Rock!"

When Hugh Bender, city planner and staff liaison to the Historic Preservation Commission, told the domino players about the award, one of them asked: "Does this mean we're Movers & Shakers?"

Bender reports the conversation about the award came to an abrupt halt when two teenage girls in a pickup truck stopped to wave at the denizens of Main and Mays, who perked up and waved back.
